

How Alcohol and other Drug Misuse/Abuse Affects our communities

The Workplace

Regardless of stereotypes and myths defining substance abuse/misuse addiction, the majority are either full- or part-time employees. And yes, showing up for work under the influence tends to happen regularly. The workplace suffers from substance abuse/misuse through;

errors in judgment, moodiness, missed deadlines, and depending upon the job description, public safety can be at risk as well.

Are Drugs affecting your business and our communities?

Alcohol & other Substance Abuse/Misuse even just on weekends and social occasions (“recreationally”), do not just affect you. They affect your body, your relationships and our communities.

Who are you putting at risk to get your high?

Think before you choose to use!!

Drug and alcohol misuse/abuse costs your company both time and money in the form of decreased productivity and increased absenteeism - not to mention accidents, insurance claims and higher healthcare expenses. To stay competitive, businesses must look for ways to alleviate employee addictions and promote a healthy, productive work environment.

Because there are different aspects of substance misuse/abuse, so too are there different avenues that are effective means of overcoming and addressing these issues. Outpatient programmes and Inpatient programmes are available in the Cayman Islands and are offered for those who want to change their habits through well established programmes and qualified staff.
